

I am concerned with practices of internet service bundling by my local cable company. They force subscription to their cable service in order to receive high speed internet access over their cable network. All that I desire is there internet service. It is my understanding internet/data services and cable tv signals travel in a separate parts of the broadband spectrum across the cable network. Please explain to me the laws governing service bundling and if this practice of requiring cable tv to gain high speed internet access is legal. Thanks.
